

Bengaluru's Electronic City is dotted with the big boys of the information technology sector. Amid that frenetic world, a 6.5-acre picturesque campus, which houses India's largest watch and jewellery company, stands out.

TITAN COMPANY is making waves. The modest 1984 joint venture between Tata Industries and Tamil Nadu Industrial Development Corporation has, over the years, grown to become the second-most valued company within the Tata Group after TCS with a market cap of ₹3.6 lakh crore, way ahead of the much older Tata Steel, Tata Motors and Tata Power. In FY25, Titan got past the ₹50,000 crore revenue mark. That took close to 40 years. But the next ₹25,000 crore came in just one year—FY26.

The growth has been scorching. Sample this: Over the past five years, companies in the BSE Sensex have grown their revenue by 104%. Titan's revenue is up 282% (see graphic, Titan's Outperformance). The company, say industry watchers, has been one of the most understated successes of the Tata group. The four-fold growth in revenue and three-fold rise in profit since FY20 has come through a mix of sound strategy and doggedness.

But what about the future considering that the prime minister's call for buying less gold to reduce imports and raising of import duty on gold from 6% to 15% has hit all jewellery companies?

For Titan, reinvention comes easy. The company—which started as a watch maker and forayed into jewellery years later—is now focused on becoming a lifestyle player. The entry into adjacencies such as eyecare, fragrances, sarees, as well as global sales—it entered Europe way back in 1993 and bought Dubai-based jewellery chain Damas in 2025—should help it sail through the turbulence.

But first, the story of how the Tatas built Titan into their enduring crown jewel.

ARUN NARAYAN
CEO, JEWELLERY
DIVISION, TITAN

“Zoya, Mia, CaratLane cater to different user segments. Beyon, a laboratory-grown diamond jewellery offering launched late last year, adds to that portfolio. The category is just 10-12% of the market”

GETTING THE BASICS RIGHT

“Restless and responsible” is how Managing Director Ajoy Chawla, a Titan lifer, describes the company as it enters its 43rd year. This is a core part of the organisation and translates into product innovation, retail innovation, new products, new ideas and new categories. “That’s what has created us,” he says. “Around 20% of our workforce is Gen Z and a large chunk is Gen Y,” he says.

The number of employees in jeans inside the Bengaluru campus gives it the vibe of a cool start-up. The language is easy and the atmosphere is languid but not casual. Deep inside is an innovation factory that quietly ticks away with remarkable precision.

A mention of the word risk connotes a certain element of chance or a high probability of things