

BEATS OTHERS IN JEWELLERY REVENUE

• Titan earns double from jewellery than its closest competitor

TITAN AND KALYAN NUMBERS FOR FY26, REST FY25; SOURCE ACE EQUITY

ket was underserved, underpenetrated or the category was unorganised,” says Chawla. Picking out the cases of Titan and Tanishq, he says value was created not by taking share from anyone. “We went in and served the customer better and grew. Yes, the category may have also grown but it was not about a win-loss approach.” The company positioned itself as a lifestyle, brand-driven, design-differentiated player, with an ability to create value for customers in categories “where he/she may be underserved or the category is unorganised or underpenetrated.” That’s where Titan had the best chance of success. “To all this, a scale requirement was put, and we said that we should serve at least a million customers a year or hit ₹1,000 crore,” says Chawla.

JUST BE AT IT

The ability to stay the course stands out. Titan got into jewellery in 1996, with the first few years being extremely challenging. The eyecare foray came in 2007, while Skinn fragrances were launched in 2013.

“When I am building a business, it’s not with to-day in mind but the next 5-10 years,” says Raghavan N S, the CEO of the eyewear division. The task is to balance vision and fashion. “My multi-price, multi-brand model needs to gel with this. Plus, I must do that in about an 800 sq ft store where 100 square ft is for the clinic,” he says.

As technology enters every facet of the business, Fastrack recently launched AI-enabled eyewear that connects to your phone, helps you listen to music and even ask questions on which movie to watch or flight options to consider.

“The next step will be launching glasses with a camera. One day, your hearing will be integrated into the eyewear,” says Raghavan. In mid-2024, the division entered premium sunglasses with the Runway brand. “We saw traction in the market,” he says. Plus, the category is brand-led, with a clear opportunity for premiumisation. Runway has eight stores, largely in premium malls, each around 300 square feet; the tick-