VENU'S BET TO ELECTRIFY TVS

Since taking charge in 2022, Sudarshan Venu, MD of TVS Motor, has transformed the company into a force in the electric segment and has helped it pip HeroMoto Corp to become the 2nd-largest two-wheeler maker

WHEN SUDARSHAN VENU took charge as Managing Director of TVS Motor in 2022, he had his job cut out: steering the company through the uncertain aftermath of Covid-19, and making sure it stayed at the top as India's scooter and motorbike market readied for more intense competition.

The industry was on the cusp of change sparked by the electrification of vehicles and their premiumisation—turning out products that promised enhanced features and higher quality to customers who wanted more and could afford to pay more.

In the three subsequent years, the 36-year-old son of Chairman Emeritus Venu Srinivasan seems to have earned payback for the razor-sharp focus he has maintained on his job: the company's return on equity (ROE), a measure of profitability, stands at 28.95% and its market capitalisation at ₹1,06,854 crore. As of March 31, 2021, its market value had been ₹27,795 crore and ROE 17.1%.

Not only has TVS Motor, a Chennai-based company founded by his great grandfather, expanded rapidly in the Indian market under Venu's leadership, it has grown in Asia, Africa and Europe as well.

Venu, joint Managing Director between 2014 and 2022, modestly rebuffs any personal credit for TVS Motor's resilience and resurgence in the post-pandemic era.
