

LEADING BY EXAMPLE

Oswal firmly believes in investing in both people and processes. “Talent is the backbone of any great organisation,” he says, emphasising that “Knowledge First” is more than just a principle—it’s a way of doing business. To that end, MOFSL places a strong focus on employee training, equipping its workforce with the expertise and insights needed for sustainable growth.

“We train our people extensively. But knowledge alone isn’t enough. We foster an enabling culture and set aspirational targets that push our teams to think big, execute with precision, and continuously raise the bar,” Oswal explains. Alongside talent development, the company is also expanding its physical presence. “We are investing in building our own Motilal Oswal Towers across the country. Right now, we have four, and we aim to reach ten in the next three years.”

By prioritising skill development and strategic expansion, Oswal has built a diversified and scalable business spanning retail broking, asset management, private wealth, housing finance, private equity, institutional equities, and investment banking. This multi-pronged approach ensures resilience across market cycles. “Disciplined cash flow management and reinvesting in capital markets have been key to our sustained growth,” he says, adding that a strong focus on technology and digital transformation has accelerated client acquisition and engagement, driving both scale and efficiency.

INSIDE VIEW

Oswal has built a financial empire not just by honing the skills of his employees but also by being available for what he enjoys beyond work. His day begins early—around 4 AM—with the first two hours dedicated to reading, followed by a morning walk or yoga. Breakfast with family offers a chance for meaningful conversations before the workday begins.

thropic initiatives through his foundation. “Maintaining a healthy work-life balance is essential for long-term productivity and clarity in decision-making. Nowadays, I devote a significant amount of time to my foundation’s activities, which I find deeply fulfilling,” he shares.

His guiding philosophy in life is simple yet profound: Learn, Earn, and Return. “Learn a lot, earn a lot, and return a lot,” he says. This principle not only shapes his journey but also defines his leadership at MOFSL.

JOURNEY SO FAR

Oswal’s guiding philosophy has propelled MOFSL to become the eighth-largest stockbroker in India, with nearly 880,000 active clients, according to NSE data. In FY24, the company reported a consolidated return on net worth (RONW) of 33.07% and a return on capital employed (ROCE) of 20.75%. Meanwhile, its consolidated debt-to-equity ratio stood at 1.59x, a level Oswal considers well within the company’s comfort zone.

“Our approach is built on quality growth and capital efficiency,” he explains. “To maintain high RoE (return on equity) and RoCE, we focus on disciplined capital allocation to scalable, high-margin businesses. We prioritise a customer-first mindset, uphold strong corporate governance, and encourage continuous innovation. Our long-term investment philosophy for our clients and ourselves ensures we consistently deliver strong return ratios year after year.” For the nine months ending December 2024, MOFSL posted consolidated gross sales of ₹7,110.76 crore, marking a 44.87% year-on-year increase. Net profit surged 49.39% YoY to ₹2,566.49 crore.

ROAD AHEAD

Oswal is optimistic about MOFSL’s long-term growth trajectory. Over the past five years, the company has achieved a 30% compound annual growth rate (CAGR), and he is confident of sustaining
