While the world has changed, I still see myself as inspired and guided by classics. Authors like Christopher Hitchens, Arthur Koestler, George Orwell, James Cameron, and Anthony Burgess have profoundly impacted my life. Hitchens' incisive literary criticism inspires me to scrutinise ideas. Koestler's resilience in adversity instills courage. Orwell's essays provoke critical thinking and Cameron's insightful observations in "Indian Summer" broadened my understanding of society. Burgess's exploration of morality in "A Clockwork Orange" challenges my perspectives. Each author contributes uniquely to my growth, shaping my intellect, courage, and empathy. Their works constitute a rich tapestry of thought, guiding me through life's complexities with wisdom and insight.
