

decades, building a strong foundation across fashion retail, and financial services. In fashion and retail alone, our footprint spans 12 million square feet, 900+ cities, and 4,600 stores across 20+ loved brands, giving us deep expertise in brand building, retail operations, and consumer engagement. In financial services, we have a comprehensive portfolio spanning asset management, lending, and insurance—our consolidated lending book alone is approximately ₹1.4 lakh crore.

Unlike industrial sectors with long investment cycles, B2C businesses demand greater agility, reinvention, and an intimate understanding of consumer behaviour. Success hinges on scale, brand experience, and operational excellence—principles that guide our approach across new and existing consumer businesses.

Take our entry into jewellery retail—we are reimagining the category with large-format stores that are 30-35% bigger than the industry average, offer a wider assortment and immersive in-store experiences, while introducing new designs every 45 days—the fastest cycle in India's fine jewellery segment. Our ambition is clear: To be among the top three national jewellery retailers within four-five years, growing at 3x the industry rate.

In contrast, the paints business is about rapid scalability and deep market penetration. Here, we have been leveraging the group's manufacturing and distribution strengths to build a high-efficiency model from day one. With six state-of-the-art plants and a distribution network covering 6,000 towns in just the first year, we are executing at an unprecedented scale.

Ultimately, B2C success requires a sharp mix of creativity and scale, agility and long-term vision, digital transformation and brand trust. At the Aditya Birla Group, we are building businesses that resonate with modern consumers, while creating enduring value.

The Aditya Birla Group is a diverse mix of legacy and emerging businesses, spanning both B2B and B2C segments. How does this composition help you navigate business cycles and market fluctuations?

With a presence in both B2B and B2C, we benefit from diverse and complementary demand drivers. Our B2B businesses—such as metals and cement—thrive on infrastructure spending and industrial growth, while our B2C businesses—spanning fashion, jewellery, paints, financial services and real estate—are driven by consumer sentiment and lifestyle shifts. However, what unites all our businesses is a relentless focus on scale, operational efficiency, and execution excellence, ensuring resilience across market cycles.

My approach has always been to build businesses that are structurally strong, cost-efficient, and primed for long-term growth, whilst being close to the consumer. In cyclical sectors, cost leadership is paramount—I firmly believe in being the lowest-cost producer, the 'last man standing', ensuring competitiveness even during downturns. At the same time, strategic investments and acquisitions enable us to strengthen market leadership, expand capabilities, and capture emerging opportunities.

Our global footprint—spanning over 41 countries, with close to half of our revenues coming from international markets—provides risk diversification.
