WHEN HE WAS in his early 20s, an age at which clarity of purpose is a rare quality among men and women fresh out of college, Harsh Mariwala had made up his mind about what he wanted to be: a businessman, and there was no way he would report to an outsider.

Having graduated in commerce from Sydenham College in Mumbai, then known as Bombay, Mariwala steadfastly followed his ambition. He started his career in 1971 with Bombay Oil Industries Ltd., a commodities company controlled by his family, before he created Marico Ltd. in 1990.

The timing for the start of Marico was opportune. The consumer goods maker was carved out of Bombay Oil just one year ahead of the launch of economic reforms that set the economy free from a bewildering labyrinth of licences and controls that had shackled business for more than four decades.
