LIFETIME ACHIEVEMENT

CAPTAIN COURAGE

For Anu Aga reviving Thermax was very fulfilling, but she finds social work more enjoyable now

THE LARGE OFFICE room in Pune is without a trace of ostentation. Anu Aga, 82, who insists on being addressed by her first name, does not revel in the achievements of Thermax or her contribution to the company. In fact, she is at peace doing the simplest of things.

“I am not very aware of social media, something my grandchildren are a little embarrassed about. I have other interests. It’s a question of how much my brain can absorb,” she says with a smile.

Aga’s journey at Thermax started in the HR department in what turned out to be a base for more learning. There’s a bit of a story—with many twists—on how she took charge of Thermax. Aga’s husband, Rohinton, in his 40s, had a massive heart attack and two days after that, a stroke. “He was a remarkable man but, all of a sudden, could not recognise me or write the letters of the alphabet. It was through deter-
