

Both Air India and IndiGo plan to aggregate passengers from Southeast Asia, Far East and SAA-RC at their hubs before flying them to long-haul destinations. Mayur Patel, Head of Asia, OAG Aviation, says IndiGo is well-positioned to capture a share of Air India's international market, particularly on short to medium-haul, price-sensitive routes. "While Air India focuses on premium long-haul travel, IndiGo's low-cost model appeals to high-volume segments like leisure. Over the next two-four years, IndiGo is expected to steadily expand in regional markets and challenge Air India on select long-haul routes," Patel tells BT. OAG is a global aviation data provider.

THE MARKET

IndiGo's secret sauce will be innovative pricing, a young fleet and new aircraft, say analysts. It is likely to offer its premium Stretch product with flat beds, in-flight entertainment, hot meals and alcohol. It is already a leader in regional international—Middle East and South-east Asia. International operations (it flies to 41 destinations and has added 15 in last two years alone) contribute 20% to revenue with half coming from the UAE and Saudi Arabia. It now wants to connect Europe, North America, Australia and the Far East. To test the waters, it has announced the deployment of three leased B787 aircraft to Europe this summer. The stock has risen about 22% in 2025 till April 22, when it closed at ₹5,535 apiece.

On the international sector, it will offer benefits such as redemption of points for flight tickets, upgrades, priority check-in and lounge access. Also, once it becomes a member of Star Alliance, its customers would be able to use lounge access of partners.

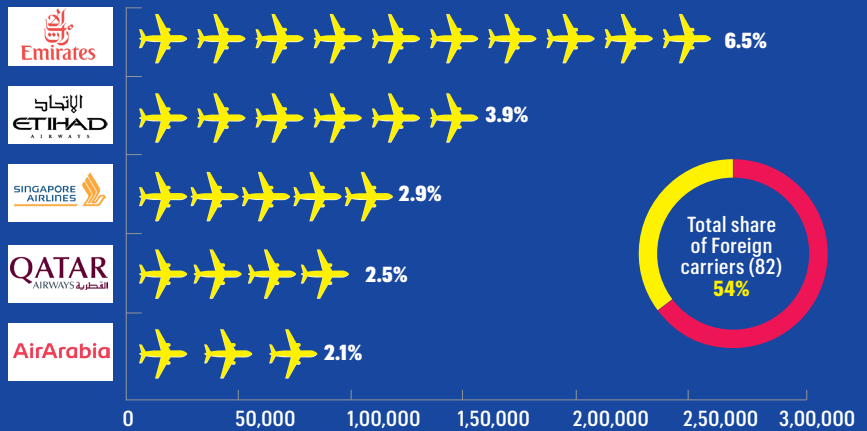

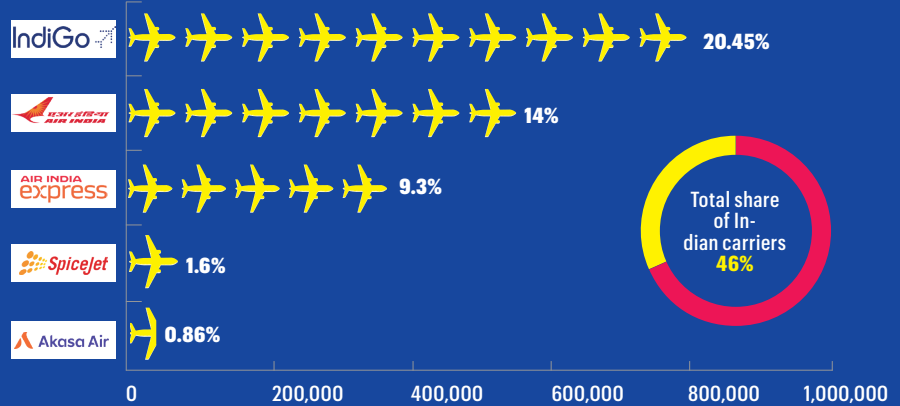

The question is, can IndiGo
