“While the October-December festive period saw a quarter-on-quarter increase in sales, there was a year-on-year decline in both sales and launches in most regions,” says Dhruv Agarwala, Group CEO of real estate advisory firms Housing.com and PropTiger.com. “Factors such as global economic uncertainties, major state elections and price increase across the country led to both developers and buyers adopting a wait-and-watch approach,” he adds.

DEVELOPERS RATTLED

It’s an all-too-familiar story that has played out periodically in India’s housing market.

Before the outbreak of Covid-19, a once-in-a-lifetime event, the Indian property market had weathered a downturn that lasted as long as five years, from 2015 to 2020.

Similarities are now being drawn between the current situation and the downturn, unnerving developers and potential homebuyers.

After stagnant growth in the first half of 2024, home sales in most top metropolitan markets slumped in the crucial festive months spread over third and
