

it is not going to get ruined or [get] damp,” says Raseel Gujral Ansal, Founder of New Delhi-based home décor brand Casa Pop, adding that the quality of wallpapers in India has improved and are now available across price points, making them more accessible.

For Casa Pop that has been designing wallpapers for more than a decade, it is about creating moods and spaces. “We like to call it art by the metre rather than simply a pattern on the wall,” says Ansal. “It’s not about having just one solid colour or an accent. It’s about providing an artistic option to people. Not everyone is a collector of art, nor is everyone in a position to buy good quality art; a wallpaper that tells a story can take care of that uninteresting space in your house,” she explains.

Its latest collection, ‘Inscape: A Lucid Dream’, is rooted in the rich history of Indian art and culture. Inscape primarily comprises three mediums—gauze (feather), lustre (silver metallic), and shantung (silk ribbed)—to interpret designs and is priced between ₹3,642 per sq. m and ₹9,468 per sq. m.

According to the IMARC report, it is the growing disposable income of Indian consumers that is driving the demand for wallpapers in residential and commercial spaces. “Moreover, technological advancements have led to the development of innovative wallpapers, including self-adhesive and removable options, making installation and removal easier and more convenient. Furthermore, the growth of e-commerce platforms has made wallpapers more accessible to consumers across India, further driving market growth,” says the report.

New Delhi-based interior designer Prajakta Gupta says that wallpapers have become popular because you cannot get the same impact with

