power, buildings, railways, electric vehicles, and city gas distribution.

Reddy's white full-sleeved shirt with the MEIL logo on the breast pocket goes well with his black trousers and slip-ons. Nothing fancy, but that's exactly what he wants to be seen as. He declines even to be photographed. The interview with BT is his first big media interaction, and if the electoral bonds issue had not come to light, one would have ignored Reddy and MEIL. Fiddling with a notepad and use-and-throw pen, Reddy does not look like the owner of a ₹32,000-crore diversified business. “I am just a common man,” he says several times during the chat.

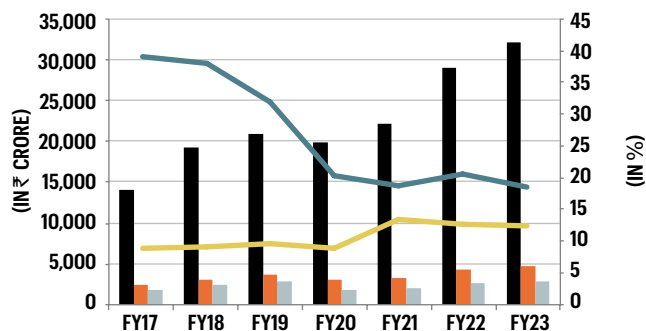

That line might have worked in the past. Today is another story, though, as Reddy is suddenly in the limelight—after the electoral bond donations to both national and regional political parties—emerging as the entity that made the single-largest contribution to any one party, in this case the BJP. We grill him to get to the bottom of the MEIL story.

MAKING IT BIG

Reddy does not hold any fancy degrees. A commerce graduate, he got into his uncle Pitchi Reddy Pamireddy's business in the early 1990s and learnt on the job. Pamireddy launched his business of making pipes for
