CHARANJOT SINGH NANDA, President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of India, underlines three key priorities for his tenure: highlighting the role of chartered accountants (CAs) in nation building, bringing best accounting practices in sectors like ESG, technology and sustainability, and promoting work life-balance for CAs. In an interview with Business Today, Nanda discusses some pressing matters that the ICAI is working on. Edited excerpts:

There seems to be a shortage of CAs, and this is seen to become graver as the economy grows. What is the ICAI doing to tackle this?

The shortage of CAs has been an ongoing issue. Demand has increased over the years due to various reasons, including economic expansion, the growth of start-ups, and complex regulatory and compliance requirements. CAs are complete business solution providers and take care of the growing number of regulatory and compliance requirements. There are several new avenues as well, such as forensic accounting, valuations, sustainability reporting, entrepreneurship, and risk management apart from the conventional domains of financial reporting, finance and accounting. These roles
