

It undertook massive restructuring of operations, manpower and debt; kept product quality high

New bidding process brought huge relief for wind companies by increasing tariffs

Suzlon went on an overdrive to raise funds, cut debt and expand margins; turned debt-free

Acquisition of operations and maintenance player Renom has brought margins, stability to revenue visibility

SUZLON ENERGY V/S NIFTY 50

• The 2023 debt-free status was a turning point for the stock price

● SUZLON ENERGY LTD. ● NIFTY 50

BASE INDEXED TO 100 SOURCE ACE EQUITY

senior management is confident their products are still technically the best. “Even today, competition cannot replicate our turbine design,” says Vinod Tanti.

Girish chips in and says the company’s primary goal is combating climate change. “We are working for that larger cause,” he says.

THE CRISIS

The picture of Tulsi Tanti, Suzlon’s founder, who passed away in October 2022, is a constant across the campus. So is the sense of quiet confidence, a far cry from the turbulence till a few years ago.

J.P. Chalasani, CEO, Suzlon Group, picks out 2017 as the turning point. That year, India did 5 GW of wind energy installation, of which Suzlon’s share was 1.8 GW. “When the move from regulated tariff to competitive bidding took place, project commissioning took a hit. That period was challenging with high debt and an interest outgo of ₹100 crore per month,” he says. He is referring to the reverse bidding system introduced in 2017 under which the companies had to further outbid each other after the opening of the initial bids. This led to a crash in wind power rates and put immense pressure on the companies.

The pressures forced the company to address its high costs and debt. “At that point, our breakeven for the wind turbine generator (WTG) business was 1,500 MW. We brought it down to around 600-700 MW. We also reorganised manpower and other operations,” says Chalasani.

Debt, too, was a big issue. The first step towards tackling that was a rights issue culminating in a qualified institutional placement in 2023. It led to promoters diluting their shareholding from a peak of 70%. “We became debt-free in August 2023. As on March 2025, we