that.” Starting mid-last year, new orders have come from Juniper Green Energy, Aditya Birla Renewables, NTPC Green, Jindal Renewable Power and Torrent Power. “NTPC Green was a breakthrough. It opens the PSU segment. While we can continue to grow at 2x, the overall market is providing opportunities beyond that. It means we must work harder,” says Chalasani.

From an investor's point of view, the promoters' holding has dropped steadily. In 2015, Dilip Shanghvi, CMD of Sun Pharmaceutical Industries, put in ₹1,800 crore during a difficult period for a 23% stake. Girish speaks of Shanghvi as a valued investor.

“As a family, they have stayed with us during the toughest of times. They continue to remain a large shareholder, and we look towards them for guidance.” In a more recent development, the promoter family of Suzlon transferred around 1.46% of their equity to a few institutional investors, reducing their holding to 11.75%. Girish is clear that “this is a purpose-driven and calibrated action to broaden Suzlon's institutional ownership, enhance shareholder value and strategically unlock capital for reinvestment in India's renewable energy ecosystem.”

Understandably, there is some concern on low promoter ownership. “This marginal dilution in no way reflects a change in our long-term commitment. The Tanti family continues to play an active leadership role and is committed to unlocking the next phase of growth with our management team,” he says.

There is a lot Suzlon has been through in its three-decade journey. The promoter family is clear that they are in for the long haul. “We must be a renewable energy solutions company from just the one in wind,” says Girish, as Vinod nods in agreement. That is a good place to be in. BT
