

Q&A

“Generational chance of export-led growth”

Sajid Z. Chinoy, MD and Chief India Economist at JPMorgan, on the economic outlook for India and the world

BY SIDDHARTH ZARABI

NOTED ECONOMIST

Sajid Z. Chinoy, Managing Director and Chief India Economist at JPMorgan, feels no matter what progress the US makes on trade deals, the global economy will experience some pain. Edited excerpts:

28 |

What is your reading of the trade situation, given that India is in talks with the US?

I think there are always opportunities in a crisis, and that's what we're seeing from the broader global standpoint. It is transformational in the sense that we're seeing supply chains getting rejigged like they haven't been in 20 or 30 years. The global economy went into this trade turmoil on a relatively sound footing, despite all the noise around the US economy contracting in the first quarter. But I think we should not underestimate what both the near-term hit to global growth is going to be, as well as the medium-term opportunity

PHOTO BY BANDEEP SINGH