“Whenever you have new technology like [AI], it creates a lot of excitement, and you end up with some pretty crazy valuations. I think we have to wait and see how things settle down before we commit a lot of money to such sectors”

A: Definitely, because more and more of these trade agreements are being signed. As these agreements are reached, stability will return and so will confidence. I think we’ll see a much more stable environment in the next three or four months.

Q: What would that mean for emerging markets like India?

A: I think one of the things that is going to be good for India, and emerging markets generally, is that investors around the world realise they cannot depend only on the US. So, you’ll see more money flowing into emerging market countries. And, of course, India is at the top of the list.
