sustainable Novo’s growth is, especially as newer molecules challenge the dominance of semaglutide. India may hold the answer to this vexatious question.

“As generics enter the market post-2026, Novo Nordisk remains focused on delivering scientifically advanced high-quality therapies that go beyond weight loss to address broader metabolic and chronic health conditions,” says Shrotriya. “We are investing in next-generation innovations, expanding access and strengthening partnerships across the healthcare ecosystem to ensure long-term value and sustained patient trust.”

Wegovy’s launch in India is not just another product rollout—it is a strategic signal. As obesity becomes a defining public health issue, Novo is looking to embed itself early, build long-term patient trust and shape how the disease is addressed on the ground. “As a healthcare brand with a legacy of 100+ years, we are committed to serving all people who depend on our medicines through a strong and diversified product portfolio,” says Shrotriya.

The coming years will reveal whether Novo’s first-mover advantage holds in the face of rising competition and a highly dynamic healthcare environment. Shrotriya believes that innovation, not just pricing, will determine who leads the obesity treatment market in the long run. “Innovation is the cornerstone of Novo Nordisk’s product strategy,” he says. “Our obesity portfolio is backed by over 25 years of research and innovation.”

That research, he says, is not merely about weight reduction. “Semaglutide, the active ingredient in Wegovy, stands out for its clinically proven health benefits extending beyond weight loss—such as reducing cardiovascular incidents, fatty liver disease and chronic kidney disease.”

PREPARING FOR THE LAUNCH

A key component of Novo Nordisk’s India strategy for Wegovy is its Global Business Services (GBS) centre in Bengaluru. The centre plays an important role across functions, supporting the value chain from early research to supply chain management.

John Dawber, Corporate Vice President & Managing Director of Global Business Services at Novo Nordisk, says the Bengaluru hub is involved in everything right from regulatory submissions and marketing strategies to medical support and commercial analytics.

Serving as a bridge between the company’s Denmark headquarters and over 80 global affiliates, GBS
