

‘sleep tourism’—offering guests the opportunity to enjoy quality sleep—and hotels and resorts across the globe are going all out to ensure you catch the necessary snooze time.

At the newly opened Fairmont Mumbai, there is an entire floor dedicated to wellness and longevity treatments, including a cryotherapy chamber that uses extreme cold (-85 degrees celsius) to reduce inflammation, accelerate muscle recovery, and boost circulation, all of which help with better sleep. A three-minute session in the cryotherapy chamber costs ₹6,500. There is also a hyperbaric oxygen pod, a pressurised chamber that delivers pure oxygen to your body. A 60-minute session also costs ₹6,500 and is supposed to help you sleep better.

88 | At Ananda in the Himalayas, which is celebrating 25 years, the Sleep Enhancement Programme is offered for a minimum of seven nights, with 14 nights or more recommended for long-term benefits. It is tailored for individuals facing insomnia, sleep apnea, irregular sleep patterns, or excessive dreaming, often linked to emotional or physiological imbalances. They look at a three-pronged approach—physical restoration, mental stillness, and emotional healing—all through a combination of Ayurveda, yoga, and lifestyle correction. A seven-night package starts at ₹50,000 plus taxes, including therapies and meals.

“As travellers increasingly seek experiences that support their wellbeing, the concept of ‘sleep vacations’ has emerged as a compelling trend,” says Candice D’Cruz, Vice President, Luxury Brands, Asia Pacific, Hilton. At Conrad Properties across the globe, guests get premium sleep amenities such as Frette linens, high-quality mattress toppers, blackout curtains, etc., along with thoughtfully curated sleep-supportive rituals. These include essential oil-infused baths, nutritious late-night menus, calming herbal teas, nightcaps, and silky pyjamas!

While Conrad Bengaluru uses a sandalwood-infused room spray, known for its calming properties, as part of the evening turndown service, Conrad Bali presents a unique approach with the SWAY Sleep Therapy—a 60-minute immersive session (priced approximately $90) where guests are gently rocked in a cocoon-like hammock. This experience combines aromatherapy, guided meditation, natural soundscapes, and light massage to simulate the sensation of floating, encouraging deep relaxation. The idea is to make the guest feel as if he is in a cocoon or a womb.
