

1
Something's
Brewing
& Kaapi
Machines
India, a D2C
marketplace,
sells coffee
machines
priced between ₹50,000 and ₹5 lakh

2
Priced at ₹34,500, the Lattissima
One coffee
machine by Nespresso
brews
cappuccinos, lattes and
espresso macchiatos at the touch of a button

2

D2C marketplace for all things coffee, says that the demand for coffee machines has grown significantly since he set up business in 2020. Its flagship product, Budan One Touch Coffee Machine, can brew using both coffee pods and ground coffee, creating everything from a rich espresso to a frothy cappuccino. “The ₹50,000-1 lakh segment is the most interesting. Around 20% of our business comes from this segment,” says Mathur. “Today, the coffee machine has moved from the kitchen to the bar area,” he says. Mathur sells 5-10 coffee machines in the ₹3-5 lakh category every month. “We can even customise the colour of the coffee machine. Actor Tapsee Pannu wanted a pink machine. We got it for her,” says Mathur. While the expensive espresso machines are his highest selling in terms of value, Moka Pot tops in volume. Something's Brewing posted revenues of ₹7.9 crore in FY24.

With specialty coffee being no longer a niche indulgence but a mainstream movement, demand for high-quality beans, unique brewing techniques, and globally sourced single-origin coffee is soaring. Major brands like Greece-based Coffee Island, which recently opened its first store in Gurugram, offer global single estate beans, powders and instant solutions to consumers who don't want to compromise on their at-home experience. Similarly, brands like Blue Tokai and Third Wave Coffee not only serve a cup of coffee but also offer roasted beans that can be ground as per your specifications. They also sell equipment like the French Press and Pour Over. Additionally, you can buy coffee subscriptions to get your regular fix.

As more coffee lovers learn to distinguish between Arabica and Robusta beans, understand grind sizes, and become more knowledgeable about roast levels and origin, the market for coffee in India will keep brewing. BT

@smitabw