

*Flow, flow o' river of love,
for the love that changed your course hasn't yet dried.*

O' River of Love

Some say he was a poet, others say he was a king but, since Baz Bahadur changed the course of history by changing course of the mighty Narmada river (it was beautiful Roopmati's condition for marriage) then isn't 'lover' the word everyone is looking for? Their love moved a river then and moves hearts now; the balladeers of Mandu still sing love ballads of their romance among the ruins.

Hindola Mahal

It's flowing sideways and fragile ornamental facades have seen King Chayusul-din's words turn into the law (it was his audience hall). Beware, it can make you believe your word can become the law too. Enjoy the fleeting feeling.

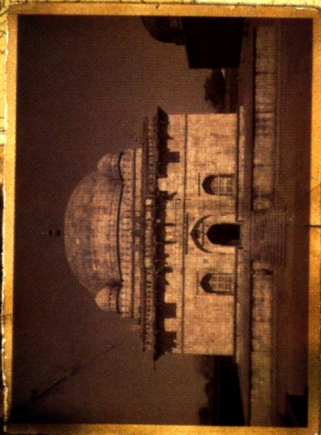

The stories about Mandu, formerly known as Shadhabad or "The city of joy" are best heard in the monsoon but are equally enchanting rest of the year. To know more log onto www.mphourism.com

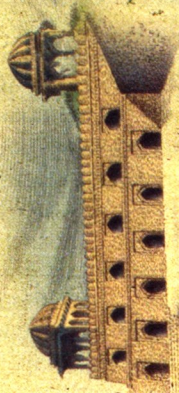

Hoshang Shah's Tomb

If initiation is really the best form of flattery, Taj is the most flattering compliment for Mandu. Shah Jehan sent Ustad Hamid, one of the chief architects of The Taj Mahal, to this very tomb for inspiration, before planning one of the seven wonders of the world.

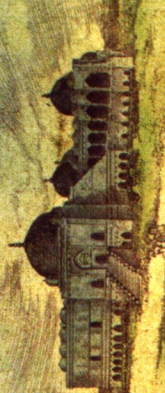

Jahaz Mahal

120 metres long, two decks, tiny domes, and turrets - some say it is a palace that looks like a ship, others - a ship that looks like a palace. Set sails to your imagination, watch it from Tavahi Mahal - on a moonlit night.

Roopmati's Pavilion

On a lofty crest short of an abrupt 365.8 mt. fall, stand the pavilions where beautiful Roopmati stood for her daily 'darshan' of the sacred Narmada. Visit it at the time of sunset for a lingering fairy dream-land effect.

Jami Masjid

If you've seen the great mosque of Damascus, you've seen the inspiration behind this grand mosque. Everything so reminiscent of times of abundance - the huge domed porch, the huge colonnades, rich and pleasing variety in arrangement of arches, the pillars, number of bays and the rows of domes above, everything so grand - even the air here is in awe.

Darwazas

Mandu is the largest walled city in India. 12 Darwazas (gateways) dot its 45 km peripheral wall, none more impressive than Delhi Darwaza, main entrance to this fortress city.
