Career Wisdom

Questions to Get Your Career Started

Many life considerations will contribute to your happiness as a new graduate entering the workforce, such as job location, cost of living, community and the opportunity to connect with people of similar ages and interests. Ask the following questions to determine your priorities and what you expect from your first job.

Career Clarity

Does the employer provide a clear picture of the career paths and opportunities available to new hires? This may become more important once you have completed a training program. How long are you expected to remain in the first assignment?

Work Autonomy

Each new hire comes with a different set of experiences and learning curves. Discussions with supervisors should include assessments of your skill level and your desire for appropriate autonomous work. Once you have completed a training program, can you work independent of close supervision?

Work Tasks

Is there opportunity for clearly defined work assignments that are interesting, satisfying and challenging? Satisfaction often comes with accomplishing assignments that stretch you. Are you able to share in decisions about your work assignments?

Career Development

Does your job open you to diverse learning experiences that help develop your career? Are you heading in the direction agreed upon when you were hired? Are there opportunities to move in different directions as your interests change and you develop new skills? Employers have the responsibility to provide a safe working environment and to compensate you for your contributions. And remember that you have obligations too.
