es,” says Rajiv Bahety, founder of Beauty Concepts, one of the country’s largest distributors of luxury perfumes, representing houses such as Hermès, Guerlain, Bvlgari, LVMH, L’Oréal, and Coty.

What makes these perfumes stand apart? Unlike mass-produced scents, luxury fragrances are crafted in smaller batches with rare ingredients, master perfumery skills, and layered compositions that evolve over hours. Their appeal extends beyond the olfactory; exquisite packaging and exclusivity turn them into statements of artistry and identity.

While rising disposable incomes are fuelling demand, aspiration is the bigger driver. Social media, celebrity endorsements, and democratisation of luxury cues have amplified the desire for statement-making scents. “Consumption growth is coming from aspiration across all socioeconomic segments, not just Tier-I cities. Tier-II buyers and even Gen Z consumers are driving growth, influenced by global exposure and cultural trends,” notes Abhay Gupta,
