

Inner Light

RHEA MEHTA SCULPTS luminance into luxury. Mehta stands spotlit in India's lighting landscape, creating light installations that blur the boundaries between art and illumination. Mehta's design philosophy, shaped by her studies at ÉSAD Orléans in France, embodies what she calls "bold minimalism"—a delicate dance between controlled asymmetry and refined elegance. Her 2025 collection features the limited edition Tote lights, priced at ₹2.95 lakh each. These feature three blown glass light spheres cradled in a delicate metal mesh tote bag, fashioned out of hand-woven steel wires. The metal weave becomes a canvas for light and shadow, while the three orbs serve as both an illumination source and an artistic statement. The true genius of this work is its responsiveness. As the orbs shift in the bag, their form and shape change, creating a fluid silhouette with no visible wires. The cadence of light shifts with the movement of the orbs, creating nuanced variations of luminosity.

Beyond its quirky design, that is a playful exploration of opacity and gravity, lies a more profound rumination on transience and permanence, the imperative to preserve and also express the inner light, the light we carry.
