

and that's opening new markets for us," he adds.

Data from Hotelivate, a hospitality consultancy service, supports this. While a majority of this new supply is concentrated in the top 10 branded markets, luxury hotels are set to expand into 64 new Tier-II and III markets. Inventory in Tier-I cities has grown modestly, with a 14% increase since 2018-19, Tier II markets have seen luxury supply more than double, and Tier III markets have recorded nearly 60% growth. Looking ahead to 2030-

31, the pipeline indicates a continued shift toward Tier-II and III locations, with luxury supply in the latter expected to grow more than 75%.

And while the domestic tourist's newfound wanderlust is great news for luxury hotels, there is no doubt that weddings and MICE (meetings, incentives, conferences, exhibitions) are truly filling up resorts and hotels.

Bhatnagar says around 12% of their revenue comes from weddings. He expects it to go up to 15% over the next four-five years. Hyatt saw 50% year-on-year
