In July, at a glittering ceremony in Jaipur, Titan unveiled Jalsa, a limited-edition tourbillon watch, from Nebula by Titan with dials hand-painted by Padma Shri awardee Shakir Ali to depict royal processions across the Hawa Mahal. Only 10 pieces exist, each priced at ₹40.5 lakh. Titan will take Jalsa to the Grand Prix d'Horlogerie de Genève, placing Jaipur on the global watch map.

Last winter, art curator Noelle Kadar, working with Sawai Padmanabh Singh of the Jaipur royal family, opened the Jaipur Centre for Arts (JCA) inside the City Palace. "Our tourism numbers are the same as Florence or Paris," says Kadar. "Visitors expect contemporary art as well as monuments when they visit those cities. We felt we now had a similar audience in Jaipur."

JCA showcases museum quality art, and its debut show featured renowned artists such as Dayanita Singh, Anish Kapoor, and Manjunath Kamath. But it also gives a voice to younger artists.

"If the story is interesting for Jaipur, we want to show it," she says, adding that their next show will be about contemporary miniature paintings.

Jewellery designer Sunita Shekhawat launched the Museum of Meenakari Heritage in March last year, charting centuries of enamel work. Her daughter Niharika Shekhawat says locals, many of whom studied abroad, returned to Jaipur out of pride. The collection showcases remarkable
