

PHOTO BY BANDEEP SINGH

2

65

3

PHOTO BY HARDIK CHHABRA

ground. According to a 2024 report by market research company IMARC, the luxury goods market in the region is expected to reach $11.44 billion by 2033.

Malhotra, who launched his Dubai store in 2023, saw potential early on. “The idea was to create a space where my work could travel naturally to an audience that values craftsmanship. At the same time, it unites Indian artistry with the global language of couture.” He is in no rush to take the brick-and-mortar route in Europe and America. “Expansion is about timing and finding the right way to tell our story.”

JEWELLERY AND BEAUTY brands from India were pioneers of retail internationalisation. In the former market, Jaipur-based Amrapali has withstood the test of time. Launched by Rajiv Arora and Rajesh Ajmera in the 1970s, the silver jewellery brand forayed into luxury, debuting at London’s Selfridges in the 2000s. Now, they boast stores in India, London, and Dubai.

CEO & Creative Director Tarang Arora tells BT