

that Amrapali's diaspora loyalists say their international clientele was familiarised with Indian artisanship after "Amrapali introduced their jewellery in these markets."

For India's affluent and international celebrities—Beyoncé, Meryl Streep, Rihanna, Cher, and more—Hanut Singh is the jeweller of choice. With a Delhi store launched in 2002, and retailing from Fred Leighton New York and Roseark, Los Angeles, Singh's avant-garde designs have helped ignite a global appreciation for Indian luxe jewellery.

On the beauty front, Forest Essentials and Kama Ayurveda took the onus to drive

▲ COUTURE SPOTLIGHT

1 & 2 Models
sporting Vaishali
S' creations

3. Vaishali Shadangule

global influence—retailing in India and the UK. Was it challenging to convince global consumers to view these brands on an equal footing with their international counterparts? Vivek Sahni, who founded Kama Ayurveda in 2002, thinks the only way to tackle this is to push authentic Ayurveda in its holistic sense.

"The concern was around awareness and efficacy of formulations, which we solved by doing clinical trials for products before they were sold in the UK. We also became the first Indian beauty brand to be awarded the Butterfly Mark