

LIVING BIG

Sudha Reddy loves to entertain people at her house in Hyderabad's posh Jubilee Hills locality, including for design houses like Schiaparelli

"Of course, in the end, the biggest luxury is having a healthy life," Singhanian adds. His greatest passion is his collection of super cars. His cars are supposedly parked over 10 floors, and the collection includes Ferraris, Lamborghinis, McLarens, and other super cars, besides several vintage ones too.

"I still take out time to drive, and that's a real luxury I have in my life," he says with a smile. When he is in Mumbai, he takes his cars for a drive two to three times a week early in the morning, and on some days he drives after 10 at night. "I love driving. I can happily drive 8-10 hours a day. I try and take out at least 20 days in a year when I go on long drives," says the 59-year-old, who was gifted his first car, a Premier Padmini, when he turned 18. Next month he will be driving around Arunachal Pradesh, while in January it would be around Rajasthan. But what he loves the most is to drive through the Alps.

So, what does Singhanian look for when buying a super car? "It's the brand, performance, and reliability. Reliability is very important. I don't mind taking my Ferrari on a long trip because 99% of the time it will be reliable. But if I take my Lamborghini, I'm pretty sure it'll break down," says Singhanian, who recently tweeted about his Lamborghini Revuelto suffering an electrical failure.

"Ferrari, Lamborghini, Maserati, and McLaren may all look the same, but they are so different from each other. It's like aloo and bhindi. I am not saying aloo is better, just different," says Singhanian, adding that they cannot be compared. While his own preference is for Ferrari, he isn't a fan of the Maserati. "I mean, if you take the Maserati, it's an undrivable car. You cannot drive that car for 5 km without getting a headache because they messed up the suspension."

And does he have any cars on his bucket list? "I'm not saying I am interested, but I'm curious to see what the 12-cylinder looks like, coming from Ferrari."

While Singhanian says his two daughters, aged 19 and 11, are his most prized possessions, Reddy talks about how she cherishes the various gifts given to her by her sons, aged 21 and 18. "They are very fashion-conscious and aware of all the latest trends. They like to see me dressed up like a princess," she laughs. She narrates a story about how on a recent trip to Paris, her older son ended up purchasing a Chanel jacket for her from the store at Dubai airport because he wasn't happy with the loose jeans and T-shirt that she was wearing for travel.

Reddy loves to entertain, and her house and gardens spread over three acres in Hyderabad's posh Jubilee Hills locality can easily host gatherings of 1,500 people. But more than large groups, she likes to throw parties for smaller intimate ones. Recently, she hosted an evening for design house Schiaparelli at her home and another for Tiffany & Co. in a recreation room at her home. Reddy's love for gemstones goes beyond just jewellery. Semi-precious stones are even part of her home décor, such as lapis lazuli pillars.

While Singhanian's home, JK House in Mumbai's upscale Breach Candy area, is almost a landmark, Gaekwad has the distinction of living in the world's largest home, four times the size of the Buckingham Palace. The 700-acre Laxmi Vilas Palace in Vadodara, Gujarat, has 170 rooms and has been deemed the largest residential property
