

The Art of Flying

Flying in the lap of luxury isn't just about getting from one point to another. The journey can be as rewarding as your destination

ID YOU EVER imagine you could sleep in a double bed at 36,000 ft? Neither did I—until I experienced Singapore Airlines' Suites earlier this year. Picture this: a private room in the sky, not just a seat, but a full-fledged bedroom with a luxurious mattress, plush pillows, and a high-thread-count comforter, all designed by Givenchy. But this isn't even the top option out there. Etihad Airways' 'The Residence' goes further, offering a Savoy-trained butler and a private bathroom with a hot-water shower. Sure, private jets are the ultimate luxury, but for most of us, these commercial options offer a taste of the high life.

THE HIGH LIFE

Once flyers reach the airport, they can look forward to amenities like well-stocked bars
