

AN UPHILL BATTLE

Women account for 48.5% of India's population but remain under-represented in the workforce

Challenges include issues around safety and transport, marriage and childbirth, and elderly care

They also often face biases in terms of wages and promotions or roles that require late or long hours at work

But organisations are now becoming more inclusive and offering facilities like flexible working hours and longer paternity leave to help female employees

It still remains an uphill battle, and much more needs to be done
