

PRERNA RAJPAL: REDEFINING THE FINE JEWELLERY LANDSCAPE IN INDIA

In 2012, Perna Rajpal discerned a profound gap in India's fine jewellery market, characterized by a lack of innovative and experiential luxury offerings. She noted that many high-end global jewellery brands were not only prohibitively priced but also often missed the mark in appealing to Indian sensibilities. Meanwhile, traditional mom-and-pop jewellers, while accessible, generally lacked the distinctiveness and modernity that discerning consumers sought. Motivated by this insight, Perna made a bold decision to leave her successful finance career on Wall Street to establish AMARIS. Her vision was to create a brand that would seamlessly blend India's rich craftsmanship with contemporary global aesthetics, ultimately catering to a modern Indian clientele that craved both beauty and cultural resonance.

Perna's unique position as both CEO and Chief Designer of AMARIS allows her to harmonize her business acumen with her creative vision.

This dual role is pivotal to the brand's success, as it empowers her to steer the strategic direction while also being intimately involved in the design process. Perna's hands-on approach ensures that every piece not only appeals to a global audience but also retains a deep connection to Indian heritage. By closely understanding her clients' tastes and needs, she crafts jewellery that resonates on a personal level, making AMARIS not just a brand, but a meaningful experience for its customers.

Since its inception, AMARIS has garnered a loyal clientele of over 10,000 high-net-worth individuals across the globe. The brand's organic growth has been bolstered by the endorsement of prominent Bollywood celebrities, including Deepika Padukone, Alia Bhatt, Kiara Advani, and Kriti Sanon, who have all adorned AMARIS pieces at significant events. This celebrity recognition has played a crucial role in cementing AMARIS's reputation as a luxury brand that transcends cultural boundaries, appealing to a diverse audience that appreciates both elegance and cultural depth.

In 2020, Perna recognized the imperative need for digital accessibility and led a transformative shift within the brand. AMARIS became one of the first luxury jewelry brands in India to fully embrace a hybrid online-offline model. With over 1,000 ready-to-ship pieces now available on its e-commerce platform, AMARIS caters to a wide audience, not just in India but also in key markets such as the US, UK, and Dubai. Perna's strategic focus on digital engagement has fostered a vibrant online community, boasting over 100,000 followers on Instagram. This digital-first approach effectively bridges the gap between accessibility and personalized customer service, ensuring that each client feels valued and connected to the brand.

A cornerstone of AMARIS's success is its in-house supply chain, which employs over 50 skilled artisans. This structure not only allows for meticulous quality control but also enables the brand to maintain full oversight of production processes. As a result, AMARIS can bring new designs from concept to market in under a month—an impressive achievement in the fast-paced fine jewellery sector. This agility is essential for responding to market trends and customer preferences swiftly.

The growth of AMARIS is anchored in four essential pillars: iconic designs with global appeal, a robust digital-first strategy, an engaged community, and a well-managed supply chain. Together, these elements create a powerful flywheel effect that positions the brand for future scalability and rapid expansion, setting it apart in a competitive landscape.

With a flagship store already established in New Delhi and plans to open a new location in Hyderabad by the end of this year, AMARIS is poised for significant growth. The brand aims to launch ten additional stores across India within the next five years. Perna's commitment to merging technology with personalized experiences, alongside her dedication to blending Indian heritage with modernity, places AMARIS on a promising path to becoming a global jewellery powerhouse rooted in Indian craftsmanship. Through her visionary leadership, Perna Rajpal is not just redefining the fine jewellery landscape in India; she is setting a new standard for luxury jewellery on the world stage.