

BELA BAJARIA, 53, has some thrilling news for Netflix fans: 2025 promises an exciting line-up of new series, films, games, and live entertainment. “I can’t wait for you to see what’s next,” she says, hinting at another fantastic year.

As Netflix’s Chief Content Officer, a role she took on in 2023, after over six years as Head of Global TV, Bajaria has been instrumental in shaping what the world watches. She is the force behind Netflix’s ever-expanding global library. “At Netflix, we are now programming for over 600 million people with lots of different tastes, languages, and cultures. This has never been done before, and we want to keep getting better at it,”

WONDER VISION

Bela Bajaria, as the head of content at Netflix, has been instrumental in shaping what its subscribers watch across the world

she tells Business Today.

This year saw the release of titles like Bridgerton, Heeramandi: The Diamond Bazaar, and Leave The World Behind, each sparking conversations and proving that great stories can come from anywhere. Bajaria’s vision of global storytelling is not just about content—it’s about connection.

Her leadership has also yielded impressive numbers: Netflix has added 5.89 million subscribers after cracking down on password sharing and as of now the total paid subscribers of Netflix count to 283 million globally. Netflix’s stock price soared approximately 85% between October 2023 and October 2024. BT
