 THE RECENT GEOPOLITICAL events—from the Covid-19 pandemic to the Russia-Ukraine war and the tensions in the Middle East—have created unprecedented volatility in the world of business. As the global economy adapts to the new realities, corporates are busy scribbling their future plans and introducing rapid changes. A relook at business and operational strategies by large companies has had a ripple effect on the way management professionals are trained by the B-schools. Professor Sumanta Basu, the Dean of the Indian Institute of Management Calcutta, concurs. Basu, who teaches operations management—a course that aims to improve operational efficiency scientifically—says the impact is evident. “Our students are finally going to join corporates. So, as they are impacted [due to the ongoing tensions], their demands [from us] are also different. Accordingly, we should react to those changes,” says Basu.

One of the most effective ways to respond to changing demands from potential employers is to prepare students for the uncertain and stressful environment, Basu says, adding, it is with this philosophy that IIM Calcutta has started preparing future business leaders. “We have made changes to our curriculum and have incorporated courses with specific focus on globalisation, geopolitical diversity and sensitivi-
