What was the problem you were grappling with?

When I took over the reins at Luminous, my primary responsibility was taking the organisation on a transformational journey. There were three interconnected fronts where we had to work as a team—expanding our presence, building business in a new category, and cultivating a culture that thrives on Indian values with the ability to adapt to a global outlook. I understood that the key to success lay in building a skilled workforce.

Whom did you approach for advice and why?

Manish Pant, Chairman of Luminous Board & Executive VP of International Operations at Schneider Electric, played a pivotal role. With his deep knowledge of the energy sector and the Indian market, Manish provided invaluable guidance. We had previously worked together on solar projects for the Australian market, and our shared experiences meant our perspectives naturally aligned. His insights were instrumental in shaping my approach to leadership at Luminous.

What was the advice you received?

One piece of advice that truly stood out was, “In a fast-paced transformational journey, think like an entrepreneur, and own it because the buck stops with you”. This advice resonated deeply with me, as it encapsulates the balance between innovation, execution, and accountability.

How effective was it in resolving the problem?

It helped me navigate the challenge of taking a trusted brand and infusing it with the enthusiasm of innovation. This guidance was crucial in making our first solar PV panel plant in Uttarakhand a reality in less than nine months. We are now expanding its capacity to 500 MW, positioning Luminous as a leading energy solutions company for both residential and commercial purposes. BT
