

Khalifa Al Shamsi
CEO, e& life and e& international

Daniel Gallagher
Chief Legal, Compliance & Corporate
Affairs Officer, Robinhood Markets

Ashish Koshy
CEO, Inception

Tech Mahindra's CEO Mohit Joshi watched the carnage unfold and called it what it was: hysteria.

"I certainly feel that it looks like a significant market overreaction," Joshi told Business Today on the sidelines of the Dubai summit. "I do feel that this is a market overreaction to a very specific piece of news. It certainly appears to have been very widespread."

But Joshi's argument went beyond calming jittery investors. Speaking at a panel, he urged global leaders to think bigger, far bigger.

"If your total ambition for AI is to be able to, you know, get rid of a few contact centre jobs or to improve developer productivity, people are really missing the picture," he said.

His vision? "The objective of AI, for instance, should be: how can we provide everybody a truly world-class healthcare service for $10 a month?"

AI AS NATIONAL POWER

IBM CEO Arvind Krishna echoed this thinking, positioning technology as nothing less than a new pillar of national power.

| 111

Omar Sultan Al Olama, Minister of State for AI, UAE, Vice-Chair, World Governments Summit Organization;
Joseph Tsai, Alibaba Chairman; and Investor Chamath Palihapitiya