Q: Let us start with the interim trade agreement with the US. Does the agreement signal a structural shift in India's trade policy, and what, in your view, fundamentally changes after this deal?

“Countries today trust Prime Minister Modi to give them a fair deal and they recognise that India is a trusted partner”

A: I think ever since Covid, when Prime Minister Narendra Modi gave the clarion call of a self-reliant India and laid out his vision for the country to achieve developed nation status by 2047, India has reoriented its very approach to the economy. We have started preparing to work on the global stage, finding our position at the high table, rapidly growing the economy, we've been the fastest growing large economy for the last four years and I assure you that we will remain the fastest growing economy for the next two decades, at least.

Q: So where do exports fit into this?

A: No country has become developed without significant international engagement. Both exports and
