

Edifying to Empower

How Satyam Roychowdhury Revolutionised India's Digital Literacy Landscape from a Small Bengal Town

While others chased profits in urban metros, Satyam Roychowdhury recognized education's true transformative power lay in reaching those the system had left behind, building Eastern India's largest educational conglomerate from villages outward.

integrated thinking. The Netaji Subhash University of Sports and Entrepreneurship, approved in July 2025, becomes India's first private sports university. The March 2025 agreement with Manchester City Football Club establishes the subcontinent's first Manchester City Football School. United Kolkata Sports Club, founded April 2024, achieved Premier Division promotion within one year, demonstrating that excellence, once cultivated through education, translates across domains.

"Our vision 'Edify to Empower' has woven a magical transformation in the education scenario," Roychowdhury emphasizes. "Millions of students who graduated from Techno India institutions have become socially responsible citizens, thinking beyond individual gains and keen on contributing to society."

Recognized as one of India's 100 Greatest Leaders of All Time, and recipient of the Edupreneur of the Year award, Roychowdhury holds unique distinction as the first Indian conferred Honorary Academician by Italy's Albertina Academy of Fine Arts. Through the Satyam Roychowdhury Foundation, the philanthropist who is known to have a heart of gold, extends scholarships to economically challenged students, adopts rural schools, runs community development programs, and supports healthcare initiatives, demonstrating that philanthropy transcends corporate social responsibility.

As Chancellor of Sister Nivedita University and Techno India University, Tripura, with strategic partnerships across 20+ countries spanning France to Japan, Roychowdhury continues building institutional capacity that transforms individual lives into collective prosperity.

Sometimes revolution doesn't announce itself with disruption—it arrives quietly, one rural classroom at a time, edifying to empower.

In 1985, when personal computers remained exotic luxuries confined to metropolitan corporations, a young entrepreneur in West Bengal saw beyond the hardware. Satyam Roychowdhury understood that India's future prosperity depended not on importing technology but on democratizing digital literacy, starting precisely where it seemed least profitable: rural and semi-urban Bengal.

This counter-intuitive vision eventually birthed Techno India, commencing operations when most education entrepreneurs gravitated toward lucrative urban markets. Roychowdhury deliberately chose the harder path, starting with computer training centres, and later on establishing schools and institutions at district and village levels first, recognizing that educational infrastructure automatically catalyses regional economic development simply by existing there.

"I do not see education simply as a business," reflects Satyam Roychowdhury, Founder and Managing Director of Techno India Group. "It is a commitment to the society, to enable its growth. That is why we established institutions at the district and village level first, rather than focusing on urban areas where financial returns would be much higher."

Over four decades, this philosophy transformed into Eastern India's largest educational conglomerate: 103 knowledge campuses spanning kindergarten to PhD, 7 universities, 22 engineering colleges, 38+ public schools, 2 world schools, 10 business schools, 16 ITI centres, and 1 medical college. At any given time, over 100,000 students access education under the Techno India umbrella—a scale that has fundamentally altered West Bengal's socio-economic trajectory.

But Roychowdhury's vision extended beyond academic infrastructure into comprehensive ecosystem development. Techno India Group diversified into healthcare with 4 hospitals, hospitality with 2 hotels, media through 2 publication houses including Aajkaal Publishers and Millennium Post, film production, and sports through United Kolkata Sports Club, each sector reinforcing the others in creating employment and opportunity.
