

From Soul to Scale: How Jimmy Jain Built India's Leadership Pipeline from the Inside Out

While most consultants train leaders to execute, Jimmy Jain recognized India Inc.'s deeper deficit—the absence of inner clarity that transforms competent managers into transformative leaders.

In 2001, as India's economy liberalized and multinational corporations expanded aggressively, Jimmy Jain observed a critical pattern across boardrooms. Organizations possessed ambitious growth strategies, talented professionals, and substantial capital. Yet execution consistently faltered. Leaders were technically proficient but operationally reactive, managing crises rather than navigating complexity with intention.

Fresh from manufacturing, curating markets and strategic sourcing roles where he witnessed execution gaps firsthand, the IIM Kozhikode alumnus posed an unconventional question: What if leadership effectiveness begins not with external frameworks but with internal architecture?

This insight birthed Square Sequel Consulting in 2006 not as another skills training firm but as India's pioneering venture connecting consciousness to capability, stillness to strategy, self-awareness to systemic impact.

"Leadership at scale requires clarity at the core," reflects Jimmy Jain, Founder of Square Sequel, Society of Design Thinking Professionals and member of Forbes Coaches Council. "You cannot lead organizations through volatility if you're operating from internal chaos. India's growth agenda demands leaders who can breathe before they decide, reflect before they react."

His answer crystallized into AtmanSphere—a leadership philosophy integrating Atmabodh (self-awareness), Atmamanthan (deep reflection), and Atmachintan (conscious action). Unlike Western leadership models transplanted onto Indian contexts, AtmanSphere draws from civilizational wisdom while addressing contemporary corporate challenges. It transforms abstract concepts like mindfulness into executable decision-making frameworks.

The BRACE methodology exemplifies this integration: Breathe, Reflect, Accept, Choose, Execute. For CXOs navigating market disruption, regulatory uncertainty, and talent pressures, BRACE offers structured composure—converting reactive impulses into deliberate strategy. Organizations implementing these frameworks report measurably improved decision quality, enhanced stakeholder alignment, and reduced executive burnout.

His impact extends beyond C-suites. Recognizing India's demographic dividend requires employability, not just education, Jimmy Jain works extensively with early-career professionals—bridging academia's theoretical orientation with enterprise's behavioral expectations. Accountability mindset, professional maturity, and collaborative capability become the foundation for productive workforce integration.

"In every transformed leader, there's potential for organizational scale. In every prepared professional, there's acceleration of India's execution capacity," Jimmy Jain emphasizes.

With Harvard credentials in Neuroscience and Leadership, certification as Leadership Circle Coach,

JIMMY JAIN
Founder
Square Sequel

Gallup Coach and extensive practitioner experience across manufacturing, sales, and organizational development, Jimmy Jain brings rare integration—academic rigor meeting implementation pragmatism.

Today, Square Sequel has touched more than a million professionals, conducted 3,500+ sessions, empowered more than 10,000+ leaders, and served more than 300+ clients across India, south East Asia and Middle East. The firm's signature experiential programs, from Leadership Development, Reimagining Sales Capabilities to Innovation using Design Thinking to The Lost Dutchman's Gold Mine simulation, translate awareness into action.

Recipient of the Bhartiya Gyan Ratna Award for Outstanding Business and Life Coach, Jimmy Jain represents transformation from the inside out—where India's growth isn't constrained by strategy or capital, but unleashed through leaders who've mastered themselves before attempting to lead others.

Sometimes the most profound organizational change begins not in boardrooms, but in the consciousness of those who occupy them.