

of executives believe their current approach enables timely, high-quality decisions about performance. Employee sentiment is even more decisive. According to performance management platform Betterworks, 64% of employees see performance reviews as a waste of time that does not help them perform better.

The cost is not just cultural, but economic. Analytics and advisory firm Gallup estimates that performance evaluations drain organisations of $2.4 million to $35 million annually in lost working hours, as managers and employees spend time on processes that struggle to influence real outcomes. What distinguishes

MODERN WORK, OUTDATED REVIEWS

▶▶ Today's work is dynamic and collaborative; performance systems are not

▶▶ Forced rankings punish collaboration and cap strong teams

▶▶ Delayed feedback turns growth conversations into compensation disputes

▶▶ Leading organisations are replacing annual verdicts with continuous insight

▶▶ Performance resets fail when managers aren't equipped to lead them
