GRIT, GUMPTION, AND GUTS: THE MAKING OF A BOSS LADY

(From left) Siddharth Zarabi, Editor, Business Today
Prabha Narasimhan, MD & CEO, Colgate-Palmolive (India) Ltd

Pavitra Shankar, MD, Brigade Group
Prativa Mohapatra, VP & MD, Adobe India
Padmaja Ruparel, Co-founder, India Angel Network

-  "Grit, gumption, and guts are common to men and women both," said Narasimhan, adding that despite having these common traits women tend to undersell themselves a little bit
-  Ruparel said a major problem was the fact that many women do not own assets. She added that preconceived notions, not being nurtured to take risks are other challenges
-  Speaking about risk-taking abilities, Mohapatra said women are often taught to be risk-averse from their childhood. "Society doesn't allow you take risks," she said
-  Shankar spoke about the challenges of being in a male-dominated industry and how she overcame initial self doubts. "The self confidence that has come from doing things my own way has helped me," she said
