

LEADING THE CHANGE

Aayush Ailawadi, Tech Editor, BTTV

Shefali Goradia, Chairperson, Deloitte South Asia

Radhika Gupta, MD & CEO, Edelweiss AMC

Amisha Vora, Chairperson & MD, Prabhudas Lilladher Capital

Speaking about multitasking in the workplace, Radhika Gupta said, "Women are natural multitaskers. Multitasking is a tremendous skill in leadership... So, what we traditionally refer to as feminine skill sets are those which are required in the workplace"

Goradia said in India, there is still a dearth of seats for women at the high table. "As leaders, we need to create a framework that will enable more women to stay in the race," she said. Goradia added, in terms of geographies, Europe does more in this respect—even better than the US

Vora said there is a need for women to believe in themselves first. Underlining the importance of investment, she said, "While you work to make money, investment and wealth creation makes money work for you. What really brings back power to your money is wealth creation"

DECODING THE FINE BALANCE

Devita Saraf, Chairperson & CEO, Vu Group

Ritu Gangrade Arora, CEO & CIO, Allianz Investment Management, Asia Pacific

Leading the session, Shankar said, "The work-life balance concept is old. At present, however, things are changing... Both have to go hand in hand"

When asked whether young workers and Gen Z are interpreting work-life balance differently, Saraf said, "Gen Z and Gen Alpha are not looking to work long hours. Their philosophy of life is, how do I get to enjoy my life"

Speaking about the shifting equilibrium between work and life Arora said, "The balance between work and life is never at the same level. Sometimes my work has taken the front seat, while sometimes my personal life has taken the lead"
