

ADANI FOUNDATION EMPOWERING WOMEN THROUGH SUSTAINABLE DAIRY DEVELOPMENT

Priyanka Mehta is engaged in a sustainable livelihood programme run by the Adani Foundation in Kawai, Rajasthan. The festival season this year was special for her because she was able to gift her daughter clothes and other essential items needed for her studies with her own income. It was an empowering moment for her. This sense of empowerment and financial independence is a testament to the transformative impact of the Adani Foundation's initiatives.

The Foundation has been actively promoting sustainable livelihood programme, particularly dairy development at the grassroots level, to boost the incomes of people like Priyanka of Rajasthan and Rewati Patle of Tirora in Maharashtra. By bringing cattle farmers together and sensitising them on leveraging a demand-driven market, the Foundation has facilitated the establishment of farmers' producer companies to operate village-level milk collection centres. These centres are run by members of women's self-help groups (SHGs) and serve as storage facilities for milk, which is later supplied to AMUL.

The women managers of these collection centres ensure that milk is stored hygienically and maintain a comprehensive database of farmers' details. By
